

Programme at a glance:

- Mode of instruction: Online (2 weeks)
- Academic dates: Monday 18 January – Friday 29 January 2021
- Academic fees: €750
- Credits: 4 European Credits
- Winter course admission deadline: 15 December 2020. Admissions for this course are processed throughout the year on a rolling basis.
- Who is this programme for: For current university students (Bachelor's and interested Master's) interested in political science broadly, and the dynamic and interdisciplinary intersection of politics and identity. Working professionals with an interest in the academic study of these topics are also welcome to apply.

Programme description:

- Recently, matters of identity and politics have become more and more entangled: when the personal and the political intertwine, inequalities emerge that point precisely to the ways in which politics affects our lives in more direct ways than we previously imagined. Black Lives Matter protests have increased in response to police brutality and institutional racism; Women's Marches (particularly in opposition to Donald Trump) were on the rise; ongoing Brexit talks raise the ghost of Leave and Remain campaigns in British society. But what are the effects of the combination of politics and identity on us as individuals, for societies at large, and for democracies?

Scholarship opportunities:

- Students from LERU and U21 Universities can apply for a €250 tuition reduction scholarship. There are five available for this course. Please indicate this opportunity in the scholarship field when you submit your application.

Please visit our website for all information, and the application link!